The Ratification at Denver.

SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.

DENVER, November 10.—The ratification demonstration which occurred in this city to night eclipsed anything of the kind ever seen in the west. Afternoon trains over all the roads were crowded to their utmost capacity with visiting republicans from different points in the state, who came to assist in the celebration. Since early evening the throngs of people have made the principal streets almost impassable. The decorations on the business and private houses along the line of march of the parade were profuse and magnificent. Among the notable decorations is an immense arch of flags and colored lights, which spans 16th street, near Lawrence. The Windsor hotel's entire front is covered with red, white and blue electric lights.

The noise made by horns, cannons and bells was tremendous. The torchlies, bonfires and fire works along the streets traversed by the parade made the sight one [illegible]. At the head of the monster parade rode Gen. A. H. Jones, grand marshal, with aids. Governor Routt and Senator Teller, followed by a hetonche drawn by four black horses in which sat Gov.-elect Cooper and Secretary of State James Rice. Other members of the newly-elected police came after, with distinguished citizens from all parts of the state. Fully 1500 men were in line.

Noticeable among the many floats was one drawn by six white horses on one of which sat thirty-eight little girls [illegible] the names of the states. Several immense rosettes on wagons were in line. Employes of the Union Pacific carried colored lanterns and drew a freight car loaded. "Saved from the free trade smash up." Employes of different manufactories here turned out in large numbers, carrying banners on which were popular campaign phrases. The El Paso county delegation, headed by a float bearing their big bull, attracted much attention and was frequently cheered.

Action of Hoosiers.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 10.—The weather was unfavorable to day and to night for the great ratification meeting that was advertised to take place. Early in the day a steady, drizzling rain set in and continued until nightfall. The side walks and streets were consequently deluged with mud, and altogether it was the most disagreeable day of the season. In view of this unfavorable outlook for an outdoor demonstration, the committee having the affair in charge early in the afternoon called a meeting and postponed the state ratification meeting until next Wednesday night. However, the postponement by the committee was too late to prevent the arrival of a number of delegations from Crawfordsville, Clinton county, and several small delegations from other points in Indiana and Illinois. The demonstration to night was therefore a purely impromptu affair. General Harrison did not come down town at all the weather being too bad.

Early in the evening large crowds began to congregate on Pennsylvania avenue and Washington street. It was the same motley looking crowd that has filled the streets for the last few days, blowing their tin horns and ringing bells. As evening approached they were reinforced by several hundred out of town republicans, including a delegation from Crawfordsville, which was accompanied by a fife and drum corps.

About 7 o'clock the rain ceased and people began gathering on Pennsylvania avenue and around the New Denison, not knowing that the big state demonstration had been postponed. By eight o'clock the jam was terrible. Sidewalks were simply impassable, and far into the muddy streets the crowd surged back and forth making a hideous din with their thousands of tin horns, drum corps and lusty incessant cheers. Within the New Denison th scene was a repetition of Thursday night. All sorts of outlandish outfits were to be seen. Some wore blouses, others on their breasts, others had their plug hats covered with red tinsel, while not a few had paper logs stretched over their hats giving them a most unique appearance. Many were covered with little flags while their leader rivalled a Sioux chief. His war paint were red calico pants or bright colored coats anything to be odd. When the Crawfordsville drum corps marched into the hotel at 8 o'clock the excitement and enthusiasm had reached a zenith. Men cheered themselves hoarse. Horsemen dressed in fantastic rigs, with hats full of flags and coats adorned with feathers. Following this valiant cavalry band, then about 100 veterans who were also covered with rags and pictures, sky rockets, roman candles and canon torpedoes in profusion, greeted the procession as it passed down Pennsylvania avenue into Market. Following the veterans came a thousand nondescripts, gorgeously arrayed in old plug hats and hoopskirts, no two men dressed alike. Some of them shooting roman candles.

Perhaps the best display was that of the Indiana dental college. It carried a coffin within which was placed a skeleton with spectacles, which was swathed in a shroud. The inscription on the coffin was [illegible] The students pro[illegible] of applause as they marched through the great crowds. Another thought the crowd was a small [illegible] carried on a pole and inscribed with the words "Good bye, Grover." The express wagon hauling an immense grandfather's hat over three feet in diameter, painted red, was there.

THE KANSAS HORROR.

Developments in the Mine Disaster Add to Its Horror.

Telegraphic Details Received From the Scene.

Working Impossible in Brewing Factory at Rochester.

A Large Number Badly Injured by Jumping.

The Kansas Mine Horror.

LEAVENWORTH, November 10.—A special from Pittsburg, Kansas, says: A detailed list of the bodies taken out of the both shafts of the Pittsburg and Midway Mining Company last night. The company had [illegible] men in the mines. Yesterday morning 104 men were hoisted into the mine. At 8 o'clock the men were hoisted for the noon dinner. At 12 o'clock they were ready to go down again. The first shot had been fired but before the men could be hoisted a terrible rumbling noise was heard above and a black cloud of slate and dust shot out of the mouth of the shaft, tearing away the timbers on which the cages were hoisted and filling the shaft with debris. The explosion occurred on the east side, and is attributed to the inexperience of some of the new men.

Before the men outside could recover their senses some of the miners appeared at the shaft, nearly suffocated. He were helped out by others, and in a large number received a blow many men known. There was a family of help at hand, and those at the top devoted their attention to rescuing their entombed companions. The Yankees was only slightly damaged, and was first repaired. Canvas being tacked over the holes that had been closed. At about 12 o'clock the Yankees was ready and fresh air pumped into the mine, driving back the poisonous gas and accelerating suffocation. Attention was then turned to raising the crippled so that the men could be lowered.

[illegible] by rope and bucket. The ground accomplish nothing. At noon in the cage was ready to descend and the first rescuing party was lowered into the shaft. Owing to the bad air they could not remain long. On the first return of the cage it contained a number of uninjured but badly demoralized men. The bottom of the shaft was badly damaged and it was difficult to get at the dead, as it was found they were piled together at the bottom. Many the living and mortally wounded were hoisted to the top.

At 4 o'clock twelve had been rescued, and at 1 p.m. four more were brought out alive. At this time they struck an entire compartment where twelve more were found dead, and at this hour (2 p.m.) twenty are dead and nine wounded have been found, with twenty five missing, supposed to be dead. A large number of the killed are Scotch and Italian miners. A temporary hospital was prepared in a blacksmith shop near by, where the most heart rending scenes were witnessed. Many mangled and badly burned men have been carried in. The casualties are now placed at fifty two dead and eight injured.

LATER.—A special from Cherokee, Kas., says ninety bodies have been recovered. It is believed there are still forty six in the mine.

ST. LOUIS, November 10.—The principal [illegible] the names of the victims lies in the fact that there was a number of new men who were not known to Pittsburg people, and many may never be identified.

KANSAS CITY, November 10.—A special from Pittsburg, Kas., says: Developments of yesterday have only added to the horrors in No. 2 shaft of the Cherokee and Pittsburg Coal Co. Citizens of Girard and Pittsburg responded nobly to the call for assistance, and every citizen in the latter city offered his services for the unfortunate victims of the mine disaster.

During the night [illegible] of men, women and children thronged about the main shaft awaiting anxiously for some tidings of the condition of the men beneath clouds of sulphurous smoke suffering death. Now, and then some poor woman who learn that her husband was among the dead would break the stillness of the night by a heart rending wail of sorrow that pierced the strongest hearts with pity.

The rescuing party did noble work during the night, and when the morning came many willing hands came to their relief. Throughout the entire day the great cage which had [illegible] regular trips bringing to the top of the shaft the dead and the living victims of unfortunate miners. Up to a late hour last evening 31 dead bodies had been recovered, most of them so badly burned and charred as to be unrecognizable by either friends or relatives. Robert Pickwood, a sweetheart, and Frank Meers, a miner [illegible] at an early hour this morning, in a dying condition and brought to the top both died before 7 o'clock.

A temporary hospital that had been provided at a neighboring blacksmith shop was used as a morgue. There the bodies of the dead were laid [illegible] for the [illegible] proportion were so scarred.

The mine is divided [illegible] east and west. The explosion took place on the east side, and [illegible] all the men on that side [illegible] powerful smoke and gas [illegible] the shaft. Only a few [illegible] like a chimney of the shaft [illegible] ing through the workings [illegible] of the south ends of the west division, about 80 feet away. Twenty five men reported up to their waist in the water [illegible] noon.

Persistent reluctance on the part of those in authority about the mine to give any information concerning the accident made it impossible to secure information concerning those who were in the mine at the time of the explosion and those who escaped.

ELECTION RESULTS.

The President-Elect Receiving Thousands of Congratulations.

Notable Democratic Victories in the Republican West Virginia.

Complete Returns from Nevada and New Hampshire.

Every Government Majority to the Republican Candidate.

Congratulating Harrison.

INDIANAPOLIS, November 10.—Congratulatory messages continue to pour in upon Gen. and Mrs. Harrison. The [illegible] Falls of the Genesee River falls are 96 feet high. When the news arrived the wire boys [illegible] the street side of the building were [illegible] with yelling human beings. At least twenty jumped from the third story and all were more or less injured. Five died before they could be removed—John Gall, foreman of the works, Joseph Dekner, Joseph Webber, Henry Sugner, C. A. Gets. Twenty are missing. It is supposed all the missing are dead in the ruins.

It was reported at 10 a.m. that ten more bodies had been found in the ruins.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., November 10.—Three more bodies have been taken from the ruins, burned to a crisp so that it is impossible to recognize them. The list of dead remains the same. The walls will be torn down to-day, and a large force of men will set to work to-morrow to look for the dead in the ruins.

ROCHESTER, November 10.—The total of dead bodies now recovered is nine. The walls have been leveled with dynamite and searching is going forward night and day.

Spooner's Interview with Cleveland.

DENVER, November 10.—Judge A. W. Spooner, a prominent Colorado democrat who has been spending the summer in the east, returned home last week. To-day he made public an interview he had with the president while in Washington upon the prospects of his re-election. To a republican reporter Judge Spooner said: "I called at the White House and was ushered into the library of Mr. Cleveland. There were in attendance at the time Senator Joe Blackburn of Kentucky and Secretary Endicott. During the conversation they followed I asked Mr. Cleveland what he thought of the chances of his election. He replied that he did not think in the extreme division of affairs in New York that it was possible for him to be re-elected. When I questioned him for an explanation he directed my attention to the state of affairs in New York and claimed his defeat was inevitable. In New York city Mr. Cleveland said Mayor Hewitt is running, which I think, to make my reelection impossible. He does not like me and never did."

Senator Blackburn then interrupted with the remark that the old rascal should have had a stone tied to him when he was young and before he was drowned, and he should have been thrown into the sea.

The president continued his analysis of the situation, saying: "He will be democratic, but anxious to defeat me. Grant is a good democrat but his desire for success has overshadowed all other interests and then Tammany never liked me. Gov. Hill is a good democrat but also is anxious to win, and I will be cut off on his account at every opportunity beyond a doubt. Erhardt, the republican nominee for mayor, was put up simply to be traded off. Now, with all these conditions against me, how can I hope to carry New York?"

Mr. Cleveland added: "The only gleam of comfort that I have had in two weeks was yesterday when ex-Governor Pattison, of Pennsylvania called. He assured me that from his personal acquaintance with the man, Senator Quay was not equal to the contract he had undertaken when he assumed to lead the republican party to success; that the republicans were greatly deceived in the ability of Senator Quay. This," said Mr. Cleveland, "is reassuring, but I fear that the republican chairman is doing something that my friends may not be able to offset. I know, for instance, that there are between 10,000 and 15,000 tramps and loafers registered in New York city, and if they all vote with the republicans it will be at me itself. If our people could offset this in the outside counties there would be a chance for victory."

[illegible] "I am very strongly of the opinion that we will lose New York through the working of Hewitt, Grant and Governor Hill. I also concede Connecticut to the republicans while Indiana is too close for calculation. Of course, New Jersey will prove democratic. Personally I do not care about the result, but I would regret very much to see the democratic party sustain defeat at this time."

Call from Fever Sufferers.

NEW ORLEANS, November 10.—A dispatch from San Fernandina, Fla., to the Times Democrat says: "Calls for relief are increasing and means of affording it decreasing. The feeling of those engaged in the work of relief here is one of utter despondency. The public here responded most generously and more can not be expected, but there are three weeks of months to fill for weeks to come. Gainesville with little of past experience shows the fever just becoming epidemic. [illegible] see a list of victims as most other places where fever has recently spread. The weather now gives little hope of relief."

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., November 10.—Thirty three new cases of fever for the last twenty four hours. Deaths [illegible] Total cases to date 1469. Deaths [illegible]

Hunting the Whitechapel Fiend.

LONDON, November 10.—General Warren, chief of the Metropolitan police, has issued a proclamation offering a free pardon to any accomplice of the Whitechapel murder for information which will lead to the murderer's apprehension.

Weather Indications.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 10.—Indications for twenty four hours commencing at midnight Saturday, Nov. 11, at 8 a.m. For Colorado—Fair, southerly winds, slightly warmer.

A New York dispatch last night said: The death of Mrs. Jay Gould is expected any hour. Dr. Baldwin said heart failure had developed and [illegible] lutely no hope of recovery.

THE GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1888.

Did you celebrate?

"Pa" on the Cricket

How does your hat fit you this morning?

Railroad travel has greatly increased since the election

Dr R. B Sullivan has opened an office in the Midland block

Maggie Mitchell in her masterpiece, "Fanchon," to night

There was a pleasant social at the Baptist parsonage Thursday evening

The ladies of the Catholic church netted about $12'50 by the fair held lately

There was another wreck reported on the southern branch of the D & R G railroad yesterday.

Alderman John Himebaugh and two children have gone east via New Orleans and Old Mexico

The Rock Island now makes direct connection so that its passengers can run through to the Missouri river.

Judge Campbell will resign as attorney for the Rock Island and Denver, Texas and Gulf upon taking the oath of office January next.

Rev. M. B. Smith of Texas will occupy the Methodist church south during the absence of Rev. P. L. Stanton, while on his tour around the world

Judge Shideler's majority had one drink from election so far. If there are any this morning after last night's bonfire the judge says they don't go.

The United States Express company have opened up for business in the city, operating on the Rock Island. They will have their office with the Pacific express in the Carpenter block.

The suit of David DeGraff against the D. T. and G. railroad for damage by fire from a passing engine was tried in the district court yesterday. The grand jury has found five indictments so far. The criminal docket is not likely to be reached before next Monday.

It is proposed by a number of the republicans of the city to take in the big ratification at Denver to-morrow. About a hundred of them will go up on the 4 o'clock train, arriving at 7 in time to join in the fun. Special rates will be secured. It is hoped El Paso county will be the best represented in the state.

While working in the rear of the city hall yesterday afternoon, workmen found a bomb. It was a piece of gas pipe about a foot in length, with a cap on either end and a piece of fuse through one of them. City Marshal Dana and a Gazette reporter took the charge out of the infernal machine. The marshal has it on display at his office.

Mr. G. M. Ewing, the business manager of the National Passenger, a publication to be issued by the Rock Island to advertise Colorado, is in the city. Twenty-five thousand copies of the publication will be issued every month, and will be a great aid in calling attention to the country. The Rock Island has, always been the most thoroughly advertised road in the west. They understand the art and will build up the country faster perhaps than any road that has ever come into the country.

Yesterday afternoon a party from the country came to town and proceeding to one of our second-hand stoves availing himself of the cheap rates on house furnishing goods purchased a fine, large second-hand cook stove and placing it in the rear of his wagon started for the north on Tejon street. But, alas, his visions of flapjacks, etc., which he expected to evaporate from said stove, The team started unexpectedly, the stove tumbled out of the rear of the wagon, the stove and its contents, kettles, pots, pans and the sore words of the owner, were distributed promiscuously upon the street. His hardware was especially "stove-up," and the farmer gathered up the remains, refusing to be comforted.

Notwithstanding the ratification ceremonies which took place last night, every seat in the opera house was filled to greet the old favorite Maggie Mitchell. The applause which Miss Mitchell received when she came on the stage showed plainly that she has lost none of her popularity. "Fanchon," which was written by Mr. C Wallace Walcott expressly for Miss Mitchell, is admirably adapted to her talents. She brings into the title role all her old fascinating life. Most of the old faces of the company are gone but among those who remain is Mr. Charles Abbott whose "Lorenzo" will be well remembered by all who have ever seen this popular actor in that part. The "Gabe Wilden" of last night was widely different from the class of characters which he usually plays, but was good nevertheless. R. F. McClanahan's "Simon Stee" the defender of the working man's rights was frequently applauded. To night the old favorite "Fanchon" will be presented. This play and Miss Mitchell's part in it need no comment. It has proved one of the most popular plays on the American stage and there will no doubt be a large audience present to see it.

FRENCH SPORTS

Athletic Amusements of the Modern Frenchman.

Jeu de Paume and Lawn Tennis Played by Both Sexes.

Great Pride in Yachting and Horseback Riding.

PARIS, October 29, 1888.

In the art of equitation more progress has been made by those whose simply ride for pleasure than by professional riders in intent. In the opinion of men of experience the equitation now fifty years of age rode better in steeple chases than the present generation. This is due to the fact that formerly gentlemen did not consider it undignified to ride against paid jockeys, and so learned how "the professionals" managed their horses in order to cross the line first. I may add, also, that almost all the young men of rich families who have been accustomed to horseback riding from their youth are now officers in the army, so that they cannot, on account of the exigencies of the service, participate in races where riders are gentlemen. They take part only in military steeple chases, especially at the Croix de Berny, where their horsemanship is most creditable.

As I have already said the number of good riders who appear daily in the Bois de Boulogne has been steadily increasing for several years back. Among those who are frequently seen when the weather is fine in the Allee des Poteaux and in the Avenue des Acacias I may mention the great M. Mackenzie-Grieves, the patriarch of French equitation, who, notwithstanding his eighty years, is sure to show himself on sunny afternoons, going slowly up the Avenue des Champs-Elysées on a beautiful steed. He is always attired in frock coat with a very high hat in style of long and two-thirds of his hands retired floating out of his pocket. He is one of the curiosities of Paris as he passes along, near the curbstone gazing at the passers-by and being gazed at by them in turn.

Among other fine riders are Prince d'Henin, Prince de Sagan, Marquis du Lau and Count de Gontaut-Biron. One of the best gentlemen riders of Paris and of Pau, too, where he was famous for his fine horsemanship, was a young American, Mr. Torrance, who was accidentally killed two years ago while riding at Croix-de-Berny.

A little group of horsemen, who meet frequently at the entrance gate of the Bois, is known as the "Boulanger Cavalcade." It consists of the famous general and his three friends Count Dillon, M. Arnaud de l'Ariege and M. Feuillant, all good riders. M. Arnaud de l'Ariege and M. Feuillant are, however, better riders than the two others. General Boulanger does not appear at his best astride a horse. He has a solid seat, and that is about all that can be said of him. Fault is also found with his attire, his frock coat and his badly varnished patent leather boots not being quite in keeping with his reputation. Nor is his famous black horse sort of a remarkable animal as one would suppose after all that has been written about it, and his friends are persuading him to exchange it for a better one.

But it is especially French ladies who have made marked progress in equitation. Each year the battalion of horsewomen increases at the Bois. Among the most daring are the Duchess d'Uzes, Countess Pillet Will, and the wife of General de Rothwiller. These ladies are generally accompanied by their relations and friends, in which case the latter may wear low hats. But when gentlemen ride with ladies with whom they are not on intimate terms then the high hat is de rigueur.

There has long been much talk of establishing at the Bois de Boulogne something resembling Rotten Row in London, a sort of rendezvous where the riders of both sexes may enjoy themselves without being stared at by the curious. With this object in view Prince de Sagan, who is the soul of our out door amusements, has had several interviews with the municipal authorities, but so far nothing has been done to satisfy the wishes of our Parisian equestrians.

The jeu de paume or French tennis was for a long time the national game of this country. Under the ancient regime nobles alone were allowed to play tennis, although the untitled upper classes often enjoyed the game in spite of this unjust law. In all the royal chateaux there were tennis courts, and in that of Versailles it will be remembered the revolution of 1789 may be said to have had its birth.

The rules of the game are simple, but it is unnecessary to describe them in detail here. The players take their stand in a spot set apart for the game and strike the ball coming towards them, with the palm (paume) of the hand. Hence the origin of the name—jeu de paume. A racket is also used. There are two variations of the game—long tennis (longue) which is played in a long open space, and short tennis (courte) which is played indoors, in a large hall whose floor is paved with slabs of neatly fitted stone, and whose four walls are painted black so that the white balls may be more easily distinguished.

The only places in Paris where the jeu de paume is played publicly are the Tuileries and Luxembourg gardens. But there are two clubs which meet three times a week in a hall belonging to their members who thus enjoy in private their favorite game. In the Tuileries the playing is very ardent, and two years ago a promising young Parisian was killed by one of the balls striking him in the temple. The best player to day is M. Georges Brinquant, a gentleman of about forty five, who is an enthusiast for all athletic sports. After him may be named Count Charles de Pitz-James, Count de Rancy and Mr. Ridgway, an American, whose family has lived in this city for some time.

Yachting is making great strides in France. Every year the number of yachts increases. Most of them are built in England, but some of our more patriotic amateurs are satisfied with the ship builders of St. Nazaire and Havre. The Marquis de Preaulx, who died recently, was one of the latter, and his pleasure yacht was celebrated for its graceful outlines and comfortable arrangement.

For a long time the finest French yacht was the Bretagne, belonging to M. Henry Say, visited the United States with his yacht a few years ago, but, growing tired of navigation, sold his yacht recently. It cost him nearly 600,000 and he disposed of it for 320,000. "That is a big loss," M. Say remarked on one occasion, "but 320,000 is just about what it cost me every year to keep up my yacht in fine condition."

Among our most famous yachts are the three Brothers Menier, the well-known manufacturers. Their three boats are Julie, Velinda and Nemesis, about four hundred tons each. M. Albert Menier recently visited India and China on the Nemesis which performed magnificently at sea and rode out several terrible tempests. One of the Meniers has just had a fine steam yacht, new design, constructed at Argenteuil. It left for Havre about a month ago, and I have been told cost in the neighborhood of 900,000 francs.

I may also mention the Fauvette of M. Peligeot, an engineer, who drew the plan of his own yacht; the Sylphe of M. Pould, four hundred tons; M. Siber's Velox, 360 tons, the largest of French sailing yachts; Princess de Sagan's Filuy, a fine sailing yacht; and lastly, Baron Arthur de Rothschild's Eros, 750 tons, the largest of our steam yachts.

All these yachts are mainly anchored outside of Paris, and this will be the case until the plan is carried out of making Paris a seaport. Most of them are to be found at Havre. But it is at Paris that the French Yacht Club has its home. Many similar societies are scattered along the coast but are auxiliary to this one at Paris. It offers prizes for yacht races, sometimes money prizes, and at other times art objects; but does not organize regattas itself. Its unique aim is to encourage and aid yachting sports. Its president is Rear Admiral Lage, an officer in the French navy, is assisted by a board of yachting amateurs, among whom I may mention Count Alain de Guebriant, Baron Pierlandes, M. Perignon, Baron Thenard, and M. Bonny de Wyse.

The Yacht club enjoys certain privileges. The vessels belonging to it can be repaired in the state dock-yards and can anchor in waters reserved for the ships belonging to the French navy. They carry the national flag with a white star in the blue stripe.

The subject of rowing naturally comes next. This city is also the centre of that sport. There are several rowing societies, and among them the Decimal Rowing club, composed of members of the English colony in Paris. As in the case of yachting, there is a National Rowing society, whose aim is to encourage the sport throughout the country.

In this city, however, rowing is not considered very genteel. Young men of aristocratic families wait until they are in the country before indulging in it. This amusement is left to clerks, who enjoy themselves immensely on Sunday sailing along the Seine and Marne. Bougival, Chatou Rueil, Bezons, and Asnières on the Seine, and Nogent and Joinville on the Marne are the resorts of the rowers, who are usually a pretty noisy set. They have a great deal of amour propre, however, and take a deep interest in regattas.

The best contested race is that which occurs every year between the Paris Rowing club and the Marne Nautical society. The idea is borrowed from the Oxford and Cambridge race. This year's race was from Bonneuil to Suresnes on the Seine. The course is 7400 metres in length, and the prize was an art object offered by President Carnot. But old rowing amateurs object to these matches. They say the chief aim of the canoeists of to-day is to cross the line first, no matter how they accomplish it. "You try to see how fast you can go," remarked one of these "fogies" along to a friend, "you don't care a rap about the scenery along the river. You don't even see the scenery along the river. You don't even see the scenery along the river. You don't even see

S. W. STELLE, of the GAZETTE.

The election of Frank Parrish to the legislature from Lake county is received here by his friends with great pleasure. The fact that such a man should be selected has raised Lake county in the opinion of a great many people.

The Saturday Mail accepts the situation very gracefully in its issue of yesterday. Thirty republicans subscribed for the Mail, with the understanding that they were to pay when Cleveland was re elected, and the Mail announces that the Mail will be sent regularly until the time is up. This paper is the first democratic paper in this city that has outlived a campaign. It seems to have made a permanent place for itself in this community.

As the republican party will control both houses of congress and the executive, it can admit several of the territories of the northwest now large enough to become states. All of these territories are as certainly republican as Iowa or Nebraska. They will give six to eight more senators and about twelve members of the lower house. They will also add some electoral votes to the electoral college. Besides, in the reapportionment of representatives, after the census of 1890, the northwest will make relatively the largest gain in the country. All these things point to a long republican ascendency, provided the party shows itself worthy of support. There are several questions that will come before congress for immediate settlement, and the party will soon be called upon to take positions which must decide its future. [illegible] There [illegible] to believe these questions will be settled wisely. General Harrison has shown his hand sufficiently to show that it is a cunning one.

One of the best results of the election is that there will be no further fear of a solid south. For ten years the south has been solid. This solid south, with New Jersey, Connecticut and New York, had a majority of the electoral college. These three states were controlled by the population within a radius of fifty miles of New York city. There was danger because of these conditions of a long democratic rule. As the democratic party was almost made up from the south, it put it in the ascendency and practically made it the governing part of the nation. There was a danger about this which was generally appreciated and realized. While there was no chance of unsettling the results of the war such as paying the rebel debt or repudiating the national debt, there was a strong and well founded feeling that the time had not come for putting the government in the hands of the south. The civilization of the north and south are entirely different, and it will be some years before the two sections can be brought into close sympathy. The ideas which gave freedom to slaves and put down the rebellion were northern and are best represented by the republican party. The south represents too much class feeling and too little sympathy with the great moral questions which we shall be called upon to settle. From present appearances the power of the solid south is broken for ever. With the admission of the new states, the solid south will not have so large a vote in the electoral college and no opportunity to control the senate. This is one of the best results of the election.

The Denver Republican of yesterday contained a notable interview with ex-Judge A. W. Rucker, a prominent democrat of this state. Judge Rucker's interview with Cleveland was on the 25th of October, twelve days before the election. He then said that he did not expect to be re elected; that he thought that Mayor Hewitt became a candidate simply to make his election impossible. He summed up the situation as follows:

"Hewitt is a democrat but anxious to defeat me. Grant is a good democrat but owed all other interests, and then Tammany never liked me. Governor Hill is a good democrat, but also too anxious to win, and I will be traded off on his account at every opportunity, beyond a doubt. Erhardt, the republican candidate for mayor, was put up simply to be traded off. Now, with all these conditions against me, how can I hope to carry New York?"

All this shows that President Cleveland is a pretty good politician and fully appreciates the situation. The only grain of hope that Cleveland had was the assurance of ex-Governor Curtin that Quay was not equal to the situation. But since the election Mr. Cleveland must have a poorer opinion of Governor Curtin's judgment than Chairman Quay's ability. There will be more or less bitterness among democrats in New York state over this, but in the country at large the bitterness will be intense.

The cabinet makers seem to be at work. It seems to be quite generally conceded that Mr. Blaine will not get into the cabinet. But General Harrison will probably be influenced quite largely in selecting his cabinet by the wishes of the other candidates for the nomination. President Lincoln took a large portion of his cabinet from the candidates before the Chicago convention who competed with him for the nomination. His chief competitor, Seward, was made secretary of state, while Simon Cameron, Montgomery Blair, Caleb Smith and Edward Bates were all taken into the cabinet. The chief competitors of Harrison were Allison of Iowa, Alger of Michigan, Sherman of Ohio, Depew of New York, and Gresham of Indiana, but presented by Illinois. It is probable that all of these gentlemen with the exception of Gresham could receive a cabinet position, if any of the above gentlemen should not wish to accept portion the state presenting the name of each of the above will have a fair chance of a representative. Besides, New England is likely to be represented by one of the Maine contests in order to give them the same. [illegible] probably will Mr. Blaine. Mr. Blaine, as the country much better. [illegible] makers have made no allowance and ever for a representative from the Pacific coast. No one person is prominent now. But the Pacific Coast has never been represented in the cabinet, and it is probable that Harrison, conscious of the handsome support he received there, will select one month [illegible] from that distrust. It would be a wise thing to do, provided the proper man could be obtained. The [illegible] which originally had two members of the present cabinet, will probably be without a representative unless one is chosen from West Virginia.

INDIANA WANTS A CELEBRATION.

Other States Have Had a Fuss Over Their Birthdays—Why Not She?

[illegible] Indiana [illegible] all the other states have had theirs. Why should not Indiana have a centennial? Or perhaps a discussion or a cent-and-dollar fuss? The idea means [illegible] Why should we celebrate the north [illegible] of the Fickle exploration of the Wabash, or the [illegible] of civilization for by the best information I can gather, this old town was founded in 1735. The venerable and honorable Judge Law [illegible] entertains that it was founded before [illegible] years earlier, but it is now generally conceded that the "post town of the mouth of the Wabash" mentioned in old French reports and maps was really near the mouth of the Ohio, so that town was first named "Onatalia."

Long 1735 for the town, but as early as 1702 the French had some kind of a post and a mission in the neighborhood, and in 1705 a fort built on the river floated to the gulf and was taken to Mobile, loaded with the products of the country. The French officer for whom the fort was named was captured and burned by the Chickasaws in 1736. The place was taken by Gen. Clarke in 1779, and was capital of this state from 1800 to 1811. And finally, the great Indian war broke out in 1798 and was not entirely ended till Wayne brought the savages to terms in 1795. So we have a fine variety of dates to select from. The last named year would suit most of Indiana than any other, for the treaty of Greenville, O., in 1795 secured title to more Indiana land than any other. The first battle of Tippecanoe, however, (of which not one American in a hundred ever heard), was fought by Gen. Wilkinson in 1791.

It is the fashion now among antiquarians to say that the Indians never were numerous, but I am satisfied they must have [illegible] a big population on the Wabash, or stayed a good while, for in my boyhood their relics could be had almost for the bushel. Every farmer's boy had his collection of flint arrow heads, and it was a common thing for the farmer's plow to turn up stone pipes and tomahawks. As they certainly did not make those things to throw away, they must have remained long enough for the waste and loss to become serious.

Since those days Indiana has done a great deal, and of course that makes a centennial a success. Our native poets, [illegible] and a brilliant roll, and of those not native, we have had the making of many such men as Hugh McCulloch, O. P. Morton, Thomas A. Hendricks and [illegible].

An interesting event of the last century, in Vincennes was the arrival of Constantin Francois Chasseboeuf de Volney, the noted French [illegible] who came up the Mississippi and down the Wabash in a canoe, to visit this French village. This took place in 1796, and his account is intensely interesting, as it proves how much the [illegible] changed since then. Nearly half the [illegible] was then a swampy [illegible] authenticated the [illegible] Volney [illegible] Governor Robinson [illegible] of the [illegible] Quarter [illegible] satisfactorily [illegible] Wabash [illegible] Vincennes [illegible] Terre Haute [illegible] Wabash [illegible] Illinois [illegible] Wabash [illegible] Illinois [illegible] Wabash [illegible] Illinois

The free reading room and library has taken on a very new and bright appearance since it was cleaned this fall and the new carpet put down. A greater interest has been taken in the library the past year than ever before. More books have been contributed and purchased than in any other year, and more books have been taken out. During the first two years of the library's existence 10,000 books were loaned, and it is thought the number will nearly reach that number this year alone. Those 10,000 books represented 469 different families. It can easily be seen what a good work is being done. Miss M. J. Cowles, the pleasant and accomplished librarian, has been very busy investigating and properly labeling the new books that were received last week. There were nearly seven in all. They include Dickens' works, complete, nine volumes of Thackeray, six of George Eliot, Gibbon's "Rome," Macaulay's History of England, Froude's, Historical Essays and twenty-seven volumes of current classics. There is a wonderful lot of [illegible] the library at the [illegible]

Maggie Mitchell and company appeared in "Fanchon" at the opera house last evening, to one of the largest second night audiences that ever assembled in the opera house. "Fanchon" is the play in which she won her early triumphs and she still does it with much of the old time go. There have been many Fanchons since Maggie first played the part but she will always be the ideal "Fanchon" to the theatre goers of America. The shadow dance has always been the most effective point in the play and there is no one will ever be able to equal the little actress in it. Mr. Charles Abbott played Jacquerie very well and Mr. Colonna and Miss Marion Clifton were excellent as Father and Mother Frontin. The rest of the cast was evidently selected for "Ray," the new boy, and their support was very different. In fact the "Fadet" of the [illegible] came near spoiling the piece. It would be well for the members of the [illegible] to remember that modern slang does not sell in the least to the effectiveness of a good play, although it may provoke a laugh.

BISHOP COXE IN EUROPE.

Bishop Coxe's Tour Through Belgium, Germany and France.

Metropolitan Hotel, Hamburg, Nov. 1.

My trip through some portions of Europe was not fruitful in incident, and I fear cannot be very interesting to your readers. It was a little review of the favorite spots which I had visited before, and where I found myself most disposed to come again.

I must mention that at Brussels, which is one of those quiet capitals that I enjoy in Europe, I was very much pleased with the exhibition now being held there, and which I found equal to one of those that have been very much praised in different other European cities. I am surprised that it has excited little public attention. It comprises national exhibits of all manner of manufactures and goods, among which the French display is in my opinion in no wise inferior to its rivals. I know what pleased me most was a sort of "annex" to the exhibition, of which I have seen comparatively little said. It is called the "retrospective exposition," and consists of a collection of the industries, manufactures and arts of past ages. It is a collection brought together, it seems to me, with amazing enterprise and skill, showing chiefly mediæval art, of which, I believe, I also no specimens of ancient statuary, beautiful work in gold and silver, specimens of plate armor, and curious [illegible] the warfare of the middle ages, [illegible] the early use of [illegible] gunpowder and of [illegible] artillery. The Green's [illegible] Grotto at Dresden is [illegible] to most travelers, and [illegible] here surpassed in the collection of beautiful curiosities of minerals, carved stones, carved gold and silver [illegible] I was surprised to see what confidence most precious [illegible] of gold and silver had been sent [illegible] churches from different [illegible] and what also amazed me was [illegible] some of the very finest specimens [illegible] Dresden [illegible]

They were comparatively [illegible] but had been enriched [illegible] centuries ago by noble patrons, with works which are now justly thought worthy of being exhibited at a world's fair as among the most curious [illegible] of mediæval art.

One of these works was by [illegible] [illegible] Bruges. There are also some [illegible] from the tombs of [illegible] long ago [illegible] gathered in their churches.

BRITISH COLUMBIA.

IT IS THE ONLY PACIFIC DEPENDENCY OF THE BRITISH CROWN.

Mr. O'C... Power Writes Interestingly of Its Scenery, Its Resources and Its Prospects—The Wealth of Forests of That Region.

(Special Correspondence.)

NEW YORK, Nov 1.—British Columbia is the only dependency of the British crown bordering on the Pacific on the western coast of America. It is about 760 miles long and 360 broad, containing a superficial area of 356,000 square miles. The Rocky mountains form the eastern boundary, separating it from the remainder of Canada, and the Pacific ocean bounds it on the west, save for a distance of about 300 miles on the extreme north where the Alaska possessions of the United States intervene between it and the sea. Its southern limit is the forty-ninth parallel, which forms the international boundary line between the province and the United States, and the northern is the sixtieth parallel. The general surface of the country is mountainous, consisting of short ranges and detached groups of mountains elevated plateaus and valleys of various extent. Running parallel with the Rockies, and in many places scarcely distinguishable from them, are masses of mountains and along the coast lies a high ridge, which is a northern extension of the great coast range. Lying between these two is an irregular belt of elevated plateau. Beyond this the mountains except those bordering the coast, decrease in height, and before the limit of the province is reached, the land has a gentle slope towards the Arctic ocean, the Peace river and other streams of the Arctic watershed finding their sources there. There are high mountain ranges inclosing a high plateau, down the center of which flows the Fraser river, its general course being south until it approaches the international line, where it turns sharply to the west and enters the ocean. The other great streams of the interior are Thompson river, entering the Fraser from the east, and the O'Kanagan, Columbia and Kootenay, the last two having very eccentric courses. The Columbia rises about in the extreme southeastern corner, sweeps northerly around the upper end of the Selkirk range, and then flows directly south between the Selkirk and Gold mountains into the United States. The Kootenay has its source in the same region as the Columbia, makes a long sweep to the south, crosses the boundary line and returning again, discharges its waters into the Columbia. One peculiarity of this region is that a very extensive system of consequence has its origin in, or passes through, one of the long, narrow lakes, which are formed in many cases by the widening of the river, and consist in others of lakes of considerable size. The river Rar of British Columbia ... which flows ... navigation. The mountains border closely upon the coast, the shore being fringed by a multitude of bays and inlets and fringed by countless small islands, between which run tortuous, but safe and navigable channels. Outside of these, and protecting these islands, lies a fringe of rocks on the entire length of the coast, are a series of large islands, the most southerly of which is that of Vancouver, on which Victoria is situated.

The charm of Victoria is its happy situation. It ... such glorious views of the ... on the main land, and its tropical vegetation of flowers and plants affords a pleasing contrast to the snow capped mountains glittering on the opposite shore.

The island has vast resources in its fisheries, mines and timber, but a good deal of the land is held by persons who are content with the riches they have acquired, and want therefore a sufficient motive for entering upon ... Some of it, too, is held by absentees who either neglect it altogether, or look forward to a future when they can dispose of it at a great advance on present prices.

Victoria's geographical position is admirably adapted for commerce. It is on the high road of the passage to China, Japan and Australia, with favorable trade winds and open harbor. It commands the whole of the richest winds, tides and tranquil inlets which spread themselves for hundreds of miles around the coast. It is the seat of government for the province of British Columbia and an imperial naval station of the first importance. The land rises gradually from the water till it reaches a higher level, on which the principal streets are built, and from the business quarters the land rises still higher to the outskirts of town, where the residences of the leading inhabitants are to be found. The government buildings are on James' bay, which is connected with the city by a handsome bridge.

Another arm of the harbor extends in a southerly direction several miles inland and approaches Esquimault, where her Britannic Majesty's ironclads repose in magnificent security ... from every wind, a picture of strength as they lie anchored in the deep blue waters. Here has recently been completed a large dry dock, and orders have been issued to construct extensive fortifications, for which the British government has undertaken to supply guns of the heaviest caliber. Winding your way in another direction, across James bay, you come to a natural park of great beauty which is known by the name of Beacon Hill. It is remarkable for its wild simplicity. Ever and again some moss-covered rock affords a welcome rest to those who love to linger in the shady groves, while rustic seats are thickly scattered over the more frequented paths, and adjacent to the spot where the band plays on a Saturday afternoon, attracting a most appreciative company. There you will find an animated gathering of ... with eyes and rosy cheeks, in carriages, on horseback, or on foot, the representatives of all grades of society in the charming city, in blood in its strength and youth in its beauty. Then on past the oaks and firs to grassy slopes and sunny lawns, where many a hard fought game of base ball or cricket has been lost and won, and on till you reach the summit of the gentle incline from which the park derives its name.

Beacon Hill, slopes gradually to the water, and around its base, skirting the edge of the grove on either hand, is a magnificent drive, in full view of the glancing waters of the Straits of Juan de Fuca. The view is inexpressibly grand and comprises every feature and color that lends to natural beauty in its loveliest creations. At your feet nestles an emerald plain, dotted here and there with wild flowers, touched with rainbow hues, groups of trees form the boundary on the right and left, while on the ... the sea extends ... from shore to ... is caught by the ... the Olympic mountains the coast ... proudly rais... charm and variety of the scene that every ripple of the shining sea is a dream of beauty, and the matchless combination of wood and water, the lovely harmony of tree and flower, and the gorgeous coloring of the overhanging sky form an endless series of bright and beautiful pictures which can never fade from the memory.

Victoria possesses many advantages as a residential city for those who like a quiet life of ease and comfort, and contributing a certain amount of dignity. Its population though somewhat English in tone is really cosmopolitan to be agreeable to Americans as well as Englishmen. Each year will add to its popularity with the travelling public, and many Californians will continue to spend a portion of the cooler or balmy air, enjoying not merely the unrivaled scenery and charming society, but that priceless repose and restfulness ever promised by an entire change and such can alone be obtained by association with people of different customs and habits and modes of life from those to which we are accustomed at home. Vancouver Island has an area of 16,000 square miles, being 275 miles long and an average breadth of 58 miles. In 1843 the Hudson Bay company established a trading post on the island, which was for some time claimed by the United States as constituting a part of the Louisiana purchase. By the treaty of 1846, however, the possession was confirmed to Great Britain. It was made a colony in 1849 and was finally consolidated with British Columbia seven years later. The province was not included in confederation at the time of the formation of the Dominion of Canada, which occurred in 1867, but it joined the Dominion in 1871 on the condition, since fulfilled, that the Dominion government would unite the Atlantic and Pacific by a railway. The provincial government exercises similar powers to those of an American state government. It has the right to levy direct taxes and to borrow money for provincial purposes. It undertakes the management of the public lands, public works lying within the province, municipal institutions, licenses, hospitals, prisons, asylums, charities, and generally all matters of a local character. The lieutenant governor is the chief executive and representative of the crown, who presides over a cabinet or executive council of five who form the administration of the province and are responsible to a legislature.

Any one who visits Vancouver Island should make a trip over the island railroad which connects Victoria with the coal fields of Wellington and Nanaimo, which is gradually opening up the rich tracts, the unexplored solitudes and the sloping water sheds of this most interesting country. The scenery for some distance along the line is like that of Cumberland, the lake country of England, and though the rugged grandeur of the Rocky mountains is wanting, we find ourselves gliding over deep gorges and rushing waterfalls, now ascending the steep side of some overhanging precipice, ... which is relieved at every turn by some winding river or ... bright lake reposing in peaceful tranquillity. The view over the sound as you pass over ... trestle or turn some dizzy height is indescribable not to be attained with adequate and surprise at the many triumphs of engineering skill and mechanical science ... which you are enabled to continue your journey on the iron highway. At Duncans there is a pretty little settlement and those who wish to make a more intimate acquaintance with the interior can find comfortable quarters here, specially for sportsmen and tourists, at the Quamichan hotel. The drive from Duncan's through miles of forest, along a good macadamized road extending all the way, is delightful. The forest is a dense mass of tall, gigantic trees ... the shade of the way. It is almost impenetrable to the rays of the sun, and its depth and gloom fill the mind with a sentiment of religious awe and silent, mysterious adoration. The coils of snake like vines, the gnarled trunks and the thick, spreading branches loaded with fresh foliage, assume in the dim light forms and shapes of wild and fantastic beauty. Some of the trees rise to a height of 200 feet, and are as straight as a lance. The "Hunter's Lodge" is a very little rustic hotel on the river immediately below its outlet from the Cowichan lake, and just the sort of place to ... a hunter feel at home. It is a regular backwoods retreat, endowed with all the comforts and some of the luxuries of civilization. There is plenty of sport in the form of ... fishing, and a capacious facility for paddling. At Chemainus, about 20 miles from Nanaimo, the saw mills of Messrs Croft & Angus constitute an important industry. The large saw mills, the ships lying at anchor in the harbor, the ... at the wharves awaiting cargo, the booms ... and the piles of timber that extend down to the water's edge and by which the bay is partly blocked up at this point, all combine to make a pleasant and animated scene.

In a distance of 23 miles the grade of the railway rises 900 feet, and over this space the line crosses three trestle bridges of great height, one 1,000 feet, another 125 feet and the third 162 feet high, the last named being, moreover, 500 feet long and built on an elaborate curve. A short run of about half an hour brings the traveler from Chemainus to Nanaimo, which, with its abundance of coal and iron side by side, is known as the Newcastle of the far west. The railroad depot occupies an elevated position from which a magnificent view presents itself. Just beneath you lies the inner harbor, deep, placid and sheltered at every point, and affording safe anchorage for craft of every description, from a canoe to a line of battleships. The prominent old fort overlooking the water is a Bastion, an old landmark of Hudson Bay rule. Beyond the harbor you see the rolling waters of the Gulf of Georgia, and looking across to the coast line of the ... behold the rugged, snow capped peaks of the wild Sierras, glittering like clear, crystal spires in the sun, now veiling their majestic forms in shrouds of mist, and finally retiring with the parting day until they are lost in the lowering clouds.

O'CONNOR POWER.

AMERICAN WIVES OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEANS.

PARIS, October 25, 1888.

The list of American wives of distinguished Europeans is a long one, and very much to the credit of American beauty and of the adaptability of American women. To the people and to their credit be it spoken the foreign American wives have won a ready acceptance with extreme propriety and even in their new positions and have in many instances increased ... the social prestige of even a princely household.

It is many years now since the three beautiful Carroll sisters married into the house of Wellesley and to another well-known English families. Their story has been often that my pen would be ... caught repeating it. I have the name were I to tell it here ... many years after they ceased to be Americans their example was rarely followed by their American sisters. Foreign marriages of this kind became infrequent. Perhaps the first to open the new series were the handsome daughters of Mr. Thos. Davis of Rome, who married the Duchesses Fiano and Marquise Davoth many years ago. Then the daughters of Mr. Thorndike became Countess Sartiges and Countess Branelos.

Our dear Mr. Thorn of New York also some forty years ago contributed a heroine to the court of the Tuileries in Paris, by giving his daughter to Count de Rochefort. This lady's picture figures in Winterhalter's famous group of the empress and her ladies at Fontainebleau. Then I followed the marriage of the rich Miss Rice of New York, to Viscount de Courval who died some years ago. This lady moves in the highest ranks of the best society in the Faubourg St Germain. She and the Countess d'Arcacie, who was Miss Fisher of Philadelphia, have always enjoyed distinguished consideration in the best society of Paris.

Then came the daughters of Mr. Phelan of New York, who married Viscount Gabriac and the Count de Nathonne Lara. The two handsome daughters of Mr. Hutton, of the firm of Hutton and Beckwith, married respectively Comte de Pourtalès and Count de Moltke.

The rich Miss Cary, niece of the Astors, married the Chevalier de Steers, Dutch minister to Paris. Miss Bloomfield-Moore of Philadelphia married Count Rosen of Stockholm, where she holds a high position, and many years ago Miss Caroline McKnight of Boston town married Count Bouxhoven of Russia. This is the only Russian-American matrimonial alliance that occurs to me.

The ranks of diplomacy have been enriched by the marriage of Miss Anna Jay, daughter of the former American minister to Vienna, to General Schweinitz, Austrian ambassador to Russia, by that of Miss Thorndike to Count Raunelos, Spanish ambassador, and by that of Miss King of New York (daughter of Charles King, for many years president of Columbia college) to M. Waddington, ambassador to London, where she now resides.

Miss Zokorowski of the wealthy New Jersey family, married Count de Mont Sanlinos. A very handsome and rich Miss Parsons married to Count Lonsdale and resides at Vienna. Mrs. General Grilly (née Cassell of Washington) married an Esterhazy (not a relative of the prince) who used to shed pearls and diamonds but is now a widow for the second time. At present she lives at Washington her birthplace.

By far the two most brilliant marriages ever contracted by Americans were those of Miss Mary Lee of New York, who married first the old Prince Noer, a brilliant and handsome elderly cavalier, who used to lead the German set at all state balls. He was the uncle of the present German emperor. When he asked to marry Miss Lee it is said that he proposed in perfect good faith a morganatic alliance, which to European eyes has every sanction of morality. But the American girl indignantly refused, and he wedded her with all the formalities and granted her claim to the right hand seat in his carriage. After remaining ten years a widow this fortunate lady married Count Waldersee, the chief of the staff of the German army, and successor of von Moltke. This is a very unusual history.

The German and English papers last summer abused the Countess Waldersee in no choice terms as an intriguante, and a person disposed to make trouble in Berlin. But those who remember her in America will ... of very strict morality, and of unblemished truth and correctness, so that these scandals can hardly be believed. She has perhaps been the most successful American in making two good matches.

Roman society is deeply indebted to Miss ... for long and money. No more popular, no more elegant princess ... adorned the court of Queen Margherita than two young Americans.

Miss Spencer, daughter of Lindland Spencer, married Prince Vicovaro Cenci, called then the handsomest man in Rome. He was a liberal Roman prince of highest lineage; was immediately called to the court of King Humbert; his beautiful wife was made a lady in waiting, in which position her dignity and loveliness has long been the pride of all Americans visiting Rome. Unfortunately the health of a delicate child has of late made it impossible for her to live in Rome.

The only daughter of Mrs. Hickson Field, of New York, married a Neapolitan prince of very high family, Prince Brancaccio. It would be difficult to find a more attached couple, simple in the midst of grandeur, having everything which the world calls success, yet loving each other, home and children better than anything else. "Bessie Field" was beautiful, well educated and charming. She married the man of her heart, she is now the mother of a grown up son, she is very beautiful still, and shows perfect taste in dress. She is too, a lady in waiting to the queen, and a great favorite.

Another very successful and happy marriage has been that of Miss Constance Kinney of New Jersey, to Count Cesare Gianotti, now first chamberlain and always a great friend of King Humbert. This lady a handsome blonde, captivated the young officer of the Italian army somewhere on the Italian lakes about sixteen years ago. She has had an exceptionally happy and distinguished life. The king has always been very ... New York ... and their home ... of the queen. ... Most of these ... people ... Among the ... American sisters ... Foreign marriages of this kind became infrequent. Perhaps the first to open the new series were the handsome daughters of Mr. Thos. Davis of Rome, who married
